THE VOLTAIRE PORTRAIT

This sketch is an attempt to realize the dignity of character that must always have given unusual impressiveness to a face so lit up with French vivacity. The few portraits that have come down to us are the work of artists who were chiefly attracted by Voltaire's brilliance. The admirable bust by Houdon (who was brought to this country to take a life-mask of Washington for the national statue), depicts the keen critic and satirist rather than the student and philosopher. Its smirk and gesture, its theatrical air, convey little or no suggestion of the philanthropist, the life-long champion of the persecuted, the author of the epoch-making "Treatise on Toleration."

Huber's miniature outline sketches cleverly portray the wonderfully expressive face in a number of character and caricature types, with a success few actors can hope to approach. The portraits of Voltaire as a young man and in mid-age are only conventional, and even the later ones, when time and ripe genius had graven those eloquent lines that give such power to a naturally fascinating countenance, are rendered tame by the absurd wigs and frills that have robbed us of the veritable likenesses of so many famous men.

This, then, is an honest attempt to reproduce the lineaments of Voltaire from the several accurate, but single-mood, portraits. It seeks to combine the lighter characteristics of the many-sided and gifted wit and philosopher with those profounder qualities of heart and brain, showing him in his mellow years, the champion of right victorious, and the pioneer of our century's enlightened thought, a noble face that would have given distinction to any equally gifted wearer of the Papal tiara.

AN APPRECIATION OF HIS

CHARACTER : GENIUS : WORKS

BY OLIVER H. G. LEIGH

Custom dulls our perceptions of the ludicrous, as the conventionalities of our familiar speech and manners prove. It is responsible for graver offenses than that of enslaving us to harmless absurdities. It has lent a make-believe verity to many a deep-rooted delusion, and fixed rose-tinted spectacles on eyes that have never since tried to see the truth in plain daylight. Most of us whose mother tongue is English were brought up in the vague belief that Cowper's "brilliant Frenchman," Voltaire, was an atheist. In our mildest moods he was at best an "infidel." Pious custom, well-meaning in its good old grandmotherly way, deemed it right and wise to administer this sort of soporific so liberally that the average lifetime might glide away without our awakening sufficiently to see that the only "infidels" are those who, professing a belief, become secretly unfaithful to it. This absurd, or heinous, infidelity is more apparent in those who wear the livery and accept the wages of an established profession, whose instructions they evade or defy, yet do not resign.

To this powerful source we owe the curious fact that four generations of enlightened American and British people have grown up in less pardonable ignorance than that of Christianized heathen tribes, respecting the character and motives, the philosophical, philanthropic, and literary life-work of Voltaire. Strange indeed that the vast power of the Church in its myriad manifestations should have spent itself these hundred and fifty years in showing bitter intolerance, and inspiring its very children with intolerance, against the greatest Apostle of Toleration known to these generations, the like of whom the Church cannot point to within its pale, unless it rashly names that universally revered Martyr to churchly intolerance, who neither founded, nor drew up a creed for, the once despotic organization that used His name as its phylactery.

Champions and martyrs have never been lacking on the side of intellectual liberty against dogmatic theology and its resultant intolerance of free thinking and plain speaking. But the philosophic temper is averse to the fighting methods which delight the multitude. It views with smiling disdain the encounters between belligerents ill equipped with the kind of weapons that strike deep and deal mortal blows unperceived by the spectators. Perhaps the scholar has not even yet received his due for the quiet but tremendous upheaval he has wrought in the siege of the mediæval fortress of ignorance. Erasmus is even yet virtually unknown to those who all but deify his boisterous out-door workman, Luther.

There has been no champion but Voltaire who has combined the qualities of the philosopher with those of the agile master of the fencing art, who has played so lightly around his adversary while serving such subtle thrusts as are possible only to men of the profoundest learning. He is a phenomenon among ordinary mortals in the variety and solidity of his gifts and accomplishments, but more conspicuously so in this—that a man so overwhelmed with the honors, the rewards, the intoxicating delights of the gay world in which empresses, kings, the famous men of Europe, were his flattering friends, and the people of Paris, adorers of his wit and dramas, should at the same time be the most powerful advocate of the rights of the weak poor against oppressive kings and prelates.

This amazing duality of character is matched by the versatility of resources which enabled him at any moment to cross swords with a dozen opponents, coming at him from different points with different weapons, and to leave them floundering.

Before examining the evidence it is well to trace the influences that developed Voltaire's character. Chief among these influences was the nearly three years' visit he paid to England. Intolerance it was that caused that fortunate experience. He had been consigned to the Bastille a second time, and was freed on his promise of self-expatriation. Voltaire must himself be consulted to get a full understanding of the impression made on him by the sight of a people happy under laws which secured them liberty of religion, of thought, and speech. Less liberty than we are supposed to enjoy to-day, no doubt, but perhaps as much as they could safely stand in those days, and at any rate beyond the dreams of the French.

In Volume XXXIX, and frequently through the others, Voltaire shows that he had seen a great light, and having kindled his torch he was resolved to spread it in his own darker land. His characteristic thoroughness is to the fore here as everywhere. So famous was his name, even in a country bigoted against everything French, that, though not yet thirty-three, he was enthusiastically welcomed by the intellectual ranks. We can hardly realize the weight of England's tribute to Voltaire's genius and character implied in the bare statement that he won the friendship of Alexander Pope, a Catholic; Dean Swift; Young, the poet; Lord Chesterfield; the Duchess of Marlborough; James Thomson, the poet; Lord Bolingbroke, Oliver Goldsmith, Gay, Bubb Dodington, Congreve, Sir Everard Falkener, and many equally gifted. These names stand for social eminence, and much more than that. Sir Isaac Newton had Voltaire as a true mourner at his funeral, and as a life-long disciple who translated and expounded the Newtonian philosophy for the French, and to him the English owe the story of the falling apple that started Newton on his famous discovery. Voltaire was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society for the Advancement of Science, the highest honor of its kind then and now, conferred for substantial service.

This experience was the turning point of his great career. He had mastered the language, and wrote essays and verses in it, within a year. He absorbed the spirit which, despite a thousand drawbacks, has bred in that people a broader conception of true liberty and has inspired them with a deeper reverence for the laws which secure it than is everywhere to be found. When he returned to France there set a foot on its shore which from that hour knew no rest while a mission of practical sympathy was possible to the oppressed, or an abuse of power could be kicked and trampled down.

Two conspicuous traits of character must impress the most superficial reader. Voltaire was, in literally every sense of a word sadly weakened by daily misuse, a great writer, great in depth, force, brilliance, variety, breadth of knowledge, and great too, in quantity. But he was also great as a man of affairs, man of the world, the world of Paris and European courts. Something stronger than what we call genius is required to sustain this dual rôle. Our geniuses have generally lost in backbone what they gained in their brainpans. Voltaire undoubtedly excelled in the courtier knack of making profound obeisances to royalties, an accomplishment we of this plainer age view much as we might the fitness of a giant for curtseying to a midget. But the backbone was there, ever erect when defiance became its dignity better than pliability, and, for so attenuated a physique, the might of his right arm was astounding to the obese creatures of corruption who reeled under its blows.

Whenever we think of Voltaire as the writer of the brightest epigrammatic prose, we should remind ourselves that he is the same man as the pleader for Toleration, who felt he was criminal if a smile escaped him during those years of relentless determination to extort public justice and reparation for the fatal torturing of the innocent Calas. When we lose ourselves in delight over his piercing raillery of his dumbstruck priestly victims, we must remember he is also the grave discourser upon the profundities of philosophers like Descartes, Newton, Locke, and the rest as far back as Aristotle and Plato, their equal in keenness of logic, their superior in giving it lucid expression. And while we bow our minds in presence of the Voltaire of the "Dictionary," the "Essays" and "Studies," let us not forget that it is the same Voltaire whose tragedies and comedies and droll tales were the delight of more countries than his own. And as we pause to realize the full stature of one whose perfect mental proportions tend to blind us to the heroic measure of each, we should make the effort to view him in his workaday clothes, the shrewd, enterprising business man, who turned his hand to many undertakings, toiled at them persistently, and prospered as he deserved. All this in the workshop, the weaving mill, the chemical laboratory, the counting room, while part of each day for sixty years he was also the scholar and teacher, poet and polemic, in his library; the centre of social brilliance in the afternoon garden fêtes; the glory of the dazzling salon in the evenings. Was ever so thin a mortal compounded of so many distinct individualities!

Now let us see some of his achievements. In a day and a continent where industry and trade were regarded with scorn by the aristocracy, Voltaire by his pen and personal example put an end to that suicidal delusion. His letters from England show how strongly he was impressed with her commercial supremacy. He commends her example to his countrymen. Note the pithy literary quality of his short study of this feature [xxxix. 16]. The English alone had passed from feudalism to the stable footing of a commercial nation. Their genius for trade made them great. Their common sense welcomed the younger nobility and men of learned professions in the ranks of trade. How different in Germany and France, says he. "It appears monstrous to a German, whose head is full of the coats of arms and pageants of his family. . . . I have known more than thirty Highnesses of the same name, whose whole fortunes and estate put together amounted to a few coats of arms, and the starving pride they inherited from their ancestors."

Again, coming nearer home: "In France everybody is a marquis; and a man just come from obscurity, with money in his pocket and a name that ends with 'ac' or 'ille' may give himself airs . . . and hold merchants in the most sovereign contempt. . . . I will not, however, take upon me to say which is the most useful to his country, and which of the two ought to have the preference; whether the powdered lord, who knows to a minute when the king rises or goes to bed, perhaps to the bathroom, and who gives himself airs of importance in playing the part of a slave in the ante-chamber of some minister; or the merchant, who enriches his country, and from his counting house sends his orders into Surat or Cairo, thereby contributing to the happiness and convenience of human nature." Voltaire was a benefactor to his country in sound teachings upon practical subjects. Now that merchants are revelling in the zenith of power they may profitably ponder upon the stagnancy from which he aroused his people by his vindication of the dignity of commerce. By a happy balance of favors Voltaire it was who introduced the first company of French actors to the English stage.

How much nineteenth century thought owes of its clearness and force to Voltaire's eighteenth century labors, can hardly be estimated, and can never be over-estimated. The "Higher criticism," of which we hear so much that means so little, stoops lower than its self-respect should permit in concealing its indebtedness to this pioneer of criticism at its highest, boldest, and deadliest. Voltaire set the pace and quality when prison, ignominious burnings of his work by the hangman, and peril of torture or death were the rewards, rather less alluring than the cushioned professorships and publishers' cheques which now crowd the safe field with mediocrities, where the knight of valor fought alone.

Agnosticism finds its most distinguished ancestor and propagandist in Voltaire. Metaphysical reasoners and philosophic doubters will see their favorite original notions threshed out in the "Dictionary" essays and papers in other volumes. Many a "brilliant" essayist, novelist, major and minor poet, in more lands than one, has dug in the Voltaire mine for gems of fancy and phrase, still recognisable by experts despite the ingenious cutting. Voltaire was compassionate to quacks of every kind so long as they were harmless. "The unhappy class who write in order to live" is one kind. "Can there be greater quackery than the substitution of words for things, or a wish to make others believe what we do not believe ourselves?" This refers to a class who speak more than they read, and read more than they reflect.

A word for these times in which we live was spoken by Voltaire in his Address to the French Academy on his reception to membership. "When commerce is in a few hands, some people make prodigious fortunes while the greater number remain poor; but when commerce is more widely diffused, wealth becomes general, and great fortunes rare." For an unsurpassable example of mingled wit, wisdom, scholarship, and delicious candor in mordant criticism, read the "Discourse to the Welsh," [xxxvii. 89] in which excessive national vanity, in France and elsewhere, is tickled with a jewelled rapier.

"Ecclesiastics are not the Church." It was against this man-made ecclesiasticism, and not against pure religion, that Voltaire flung his destructive thunderbombs. In their impious assumption of Godlike prerogatives these tonsured mummers vengefully dubbed him "atheist," as Socrates was branded for holding to his belief in one supreme deity. As well might we charge Washington with "atheism." Bishop White, the Father of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, and Washington's pastor, testified in writing his doubt whether that noble man was "a believer in the Christian revelation" further than being an attendant at services but never a communicant. How far from atheism was Voltaire's reverent faith and practice is shown in every writing and act. "I repeat my Pater and Credo every morning." "I believe in a general Providence, which has laid down from all eternity the law which governs all things, like light from the sun." "The eyes have mathematical relations so evident, so demonstrable, so admirable, with the rays of light; this mechanism is so divine, that I should be tempted to take for the delirium of a high fever, the audacity of denying the final causes of their structure." The Fathers of the early church built up the creed bit by bit [in passing, note that popular knowledge of Holy Writ as a guide book to heaven has never grasped it as a whole; it has been a scrap-book of bits of the Bible only], and laid great stress on its authenticity, and on the point of faith that the saints who arose at the death of Jesus, died again to rise with Him a second time. "The fact is, [says the pioneer scholar-critic, and his statement is endorsed by our foremost orthodox scholars] that no person heard anything of this creed [as it now runs] for over three hundred years. People also say that Paris was not made in a day, and people are often right in their proverbs. . . . All these opinions are absolutely foreign to morality. We must be good men, whether the saints were raised once or twice."

Still, due deference should be paid to authority, especially when it gives ocular demonstration of its superior sources of knowledge. "I have no doubt that Pope Leo I. was accompanied by an angel, armed with a flaming sword, which made the king of the Huns tremble. . . . This miracle is very finely painted in the Vatican, and nothing can be clearer than that it never would have been painted unless it had actually been true."

Immense labor went into the making of his Histories. Considering the period, and the pressure of his many occupations, it is nothing short of marvelous that Voltaire was able to ransack the chronicles of older historians, the traditions that are scattered through general writings, the private memoranda and letters of scholars, not to count the personal interviews in which he extracted so much of fact and valuable side light, for the purpose of making his own records truthful. It is well worth while to turn to the passages in which he distinguishes himself, or, rather, his method and purpose, from those of perfunctory narrators of events. He pitched the keynote from which the ablest historians of our time have taken their own, that of helping the reader to look through the smoke of battles to the fate of the plain people who suffered so grievously by the quarrels of kings.

And what exquisite simplicity marks every page. We may smile at an eighteenth century Frenchman's astonishment at Shakespeare's coarseness, and the interesting criticisms upon his dramatic deficiencies. Even Oliver Goldsmith demolished Hamlet's soliloquy with his logic-chopping axe, a weapon he probably borrowed from Voltaire. The author of "Mérope" and "Zaire" expressly declares, again and again, his view that, at least in the supreme crises, the language should be of the simplest, as in those moments the briefest ejaculations only are natural. There is force in this, but not enough to move us to wish the lines of Hamlet and Othello were prosy. Spots on the sun do not lessen its glory, and if Voltaire cared not, if he could, to soar with the lark that sings at heaven's gate, he stands firm on the green earth as the clearest expresser of penetrating and luminous thought among writers, and he never speaks but with wisdom higher than knowledge, and with motives whose beneficence surpasses even the sparkle of their expression.

A study of these pages will assist in the pleasing duty of doing tardy justice to one of the world's most gifted and powerful intellects. They shed needed light on a man whose character, genius, and far-reaching work have been obscured, but could never be extinguished by the foes of truth-speaking.

NOTE ON THE INDEX

At first sight the making of an index appears to be a merely mechanical piece of work. So it often is, but it may be much more than this. By way of illustration it may be permissible to mention an elaborate index made by the present writer for a ten volume historical work, of which the publishers say in their prospectus that its original plan and thoroughness make it "worth in itself many times the cost of the entire series of books." This Voltaire index has also been constructed with the intention of making it interesting and valuable in itself, independently of the volumes to which it is a guide.

The editor of a voluminous author has obviously many advantages over an index-maker not previously familiar with the writings and characteristics of his hero. Mr. Percy Fitzgerald may be quoted on this. In his prefatory note to the index he made for his famous edition of Boswell's Life of Dr. Johnson, he says: "No proper or suffi-"cient index can be made vicariously; it requires a "thorough acquaintance with the book treated, so "as to anticipate by a sort of instinct what topics "the reader would desire to search for. Indexes "are generally too minutely elaborate, too meagre, "or too indefinite."

How easy it would have been to have filled two or three volumes with the usual index matter can be seen in the fact that Voltaire's pen was never at rest for sixty-three years, and no writer treated so vast a variety of topics. How difficult it has actually been to make selections that shall be equally fair to author and reader, must be left for the user of this index to discern and appraise.

The aim has been to simplify, and in the readiest way provide clues to the innumerable long and short utterances of Voltaire upon subjects treated from every point of view and in every mood. Recurring as he did to the same topics at different periods, with new side lights from intervening occurrences or continued study, he necessarily covers the same ground, though usually with a different gait. To make an index entry of each of these virtual repetitions would cumber every page and weary the reader. And the multiplication of cross-references is no less an offense to the reader's intelligence. These entries are therefore economized, the main clues being liberally given, leaving the reader the pleasure akin to that of intellectual sport in following the various trails in this and that direction where there seems promise of a "find." He may be quite sure of catching something fully as worthy of his hunt as the particular quarry he started after.

Again, there have been occasions when it would have actually broken the continuity of a subject's treatment if the alphabetical or chronological order had been adhered to. Exceptions are often more practically valuable than rigidity of rule, and for the liberties so taken no apologies are offered except that of common sense. The reader will find that his interests have been given precedence over the fads of pedants.

As Voltaire has for so long been virtually unknown to the public at large, one aim of this index is to open wide the doors of an armory, whose array of weapons includes every kind ever used in warfare, and every one, small and large, still gleams with its original brightness, mellowed with the trophy-marks of the good work it has done. These simple-looking index items, rightly viewed, are in one aspect the battle roll of a stupendous, single-handed, life-long fight by a brave truth-lover against a Juggernaut truth-crusher; and in another aspect they form a crown of evergreen laurel leaves, with which a somewhat forgetful generation is prone to crown its own brow.

Voltaire is here made to portray himself. This aims to be an index, through his works, of the man. For this reason there have been scattered through the ordinary entries examples of his literary style and play of thought. Epigrammatic sentences, passages from essays, dramas, and poems, give life to the dry bones of index matter and will prove as readable as many of the anthologies and "elegant extracts" now so popular, with this distinction, that here we have the utterances of a plain speaker in the days when plain speech meant peril of life and liberty. Voltaire's piercing epigrams earned for him the nowadays rarely attainable honors of imprisonment and exile.

If here and there the index item does not literally correspond with the text it is because the brilliance or pungency of Voltairean French can be more effectively reproduced by a paraphrase or a short cut than in the literal translation, and for this offense the result is pleaded in mitigation. Literary expression has changed, as well as incidentals which make eighteenth century allusions obscure or obsolete, and this is particularly the case in renderings of the old verse. A lenient judgment is anticipated from the Shade of Voltaire, as he recalls his own dicta upon this delicate question, and turns at our suggestion to his own translation of Hamlet's soliloquy.

The key-words to the epigrams are, of course, not Voltaire's. They are chosen sometimes as mere titles, again as side lights, and again as provocatives for deeper thought. It can scarcely be necessary to add that Voltaire is not to be held responsible for all the expressions he puts into the mouths of his dramatic characters.

In the histories of Charles XII. and Louis XIV., being masterworks of the historian, full synopses have been given in the index and shorter entries in the Contents. Where the entries are merely of names and topics, they have been made short for a good reason.

No complex piece of work such as this is can be perfect, and doubtless certain of the omissions and condensations made, always after careful deliberation, will be condemned as defects. The culprit anticipates and accepts all criticism in advance with unaffected humility, having tried to earn the solace of feeling that he, as a long-suffering victim of many brain-wasting indexes, would be grateful to anyone who might do for a voluminous author and his readers what has here been conscientiously attempted as helpful to students of Voltaire.

—— of youthful lovers forced into monastery and convent, with details of tortures inflicted on the young monk by ecclesiastical rule, as related by the victim to Voltaire, xiv. 181.

STRONG MAN, THE.

"As firm and fearless as if honor guided
And patriot love inspired him; ever secret
And master of himself; no passions move,
No rage disturbs him; in his height of zeal
Calm and unruffled." —Brutus, xv. 249.

STUARTS, THE, an unhappy and unlucky house during three centuries. James I. was murdered by his own people; James II. killed in battle; James III. killed by rebels; James IV. killed in battle; his granddaughter, Mary Stuart, imprisoned eighteen years and then beheaded; her grandson, Charles I. of England, beheaded as a traitor; his son James II. driven from three kingdoms and the legitimacy of his son disputed. This son, the Pretender, and his son, Prince Charles Edward lost their cause and were the ruin of many families of Scotland. Age of Louis, XIV., xxii. 240.

STYLE AND METHOD in writing history, x. 90.

—— "He who cannot shine by thought seeks to bring himself into notice by a word." xiv. 229.

—— "In Ariosto there is no prolixity, no defect of style, no foreign ornaments; in a word he is a painter, and a very great painter; that is the first merit of poetry." xxxvii. 111.

—— "Cheer up, man! Put on your best looks; assume that air of importance and self sufficiency which is sure to conquer every heart, which baffles wit and triumphs over wisdom." —The Prodigal, xix. 200.

—— "How puerile is any epithet that adds nothing to the sense!" xxxvii. 107.

SUBMERGED. "I want money, and that's the most pressing calamity." —The Prude, xviii. 165.

SUBMISSIVE INCREDULITY, viii. 330.

SUCCESS. "My mother is right; address and cunning are absolutely necessary in this world; there is no succeeding without them." —The Tatler, xviii. 268.

SUICIDE, strange cases, vii. 19; laws against, 29; in England, xxxix. 39.

—— "When all is lost, and not even hope remains,
To live is shameful, and to die, our duty."
—Mérope, xv. 56.

SUMPTUARY LAWS, luxury always condemned, but always coveted, xi. 155.

SUN AND MOON, stopped in their daily round by Joshua, Jupiter and Hezekiah, viii. 92.

SUPEREROGATION.
"I know to friendship Greece has temples raised,
To interest none, though interest's there adored."
—Oylmpia, xv. 114.

SUPERSTITION ONLY DARKNESS, morality is light, xii. 20.

—— in the tenth and eleventh centuries, xxix. 242.

—— is the most dreadful enemy of the human race, xxxvii. 230.

—— "O superstition, how thy savage power
Deprives at once the best and tenderest hearts
Of their humanity!" —Mahomet, xvi. 23.

SUPERSTITIONS, OLD.
"Why would ye call forth from their dark abyss
The foes of nature, to obscure the light
Of these fair regions." —Pandora, xvii. 294.

SUPPRESSION OF MONASTERIES IN ENGLAND, the discovery of pious frauds, xii. 92.

—— and torture of the Knights Templars, xxv. 206.

SURFACE FRIENDS.

These friends of the world."

—The Prude, xviii. 176.

SURGEON OF GASCONY, THE, and the Astrologer, xxxvii. 201.

SURVIVAL OF FITTEST.

"Thus the world's members equal ills sustain,
And perish by each other born to pain."

—The Lisbon Earthquake, xxxvi. 14.

SUSPICION. "Suspicion but provokes the crime it fears." —Zaïre, xix. 34.

SUTTEE, the practice of, vi. 283.

SWEDEN IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY, xxix. 68.

SWEDISH ARMY, brutality of the, Charles XII. of Sweden, xx. 285.

SWEEPER OF A CHURCH, or sexton, none but would persecute if he had the power, xiv. 305.

SWIFT, JONATHAN, 1667-1745, the Rabelais of England, xii. 311; an estimate of his genius and work, 312.

—— Dean, proposed an English Academy, backed by Bolingbroke, Prior, Pope, and Congreve, xiii. 230.

—— Dr. Swift is Rabelais in his right senses, but polished by frequenting the best company. True pleasantry is his talent in prose and verse, but to understand him fully it is necessary to take a short trip into his country. He enjoys the honor of the priesthood, while he laughs at the whole cloth, xxxix. 90.

—— there are several little pieces by Dean Swift unmatched by anything of the kind in antiquity. He is Rabelais improved, xxiii. 290.

SWISS, THE. The Swiss nation preserved, as at this day, its own liberty, without seeking to oppress its neighbors; they were poor, ignorant of the sciences and arts begotten by luxury, but they were wise, and they were happy. Age of Louis XIV., xxii. 27.

SWITZERLAND IN THE FOURTEENTH CENTURY, xxv. 214; and in the fifteenth, xxvi. 151.
SWORD-FIGHT between Turenne and D'Aumale. The Henriade, xxxviii. 146.
SYMPATHY! "Tears! let them flow,
'Tis the best mark of our humanity;
The heart that feels not for another's woe
Is fit for every crime." —Alzïre, xvii. 21.
—— "The poor are always compassionate."
—The Prodigal, xix. 188.
SYMPHORIAN AND SYMPHOROSIA, saints and martyrs, xi. 217.

A PHILOSOPHICAL DICTIONARY.

VOL. XIII.—CONTINUED.

SAMOTHRACE—SYSTEM.

SAMOTHRACE and its gods, xiii. 160; its legend of a deluge, an ark, and doves sent to find land, 163.
SAMSON, Milton's and other dramas, 165.
SATURN'S RING, curious notions about, 169.
SCANDALS, priestly, 170.
SCHISM, a Christian malady, 174; a delirium of abuse and enmity, curable only by philosophy, 175.
SCROFULA, healed by the King's touch, 179; this power departed when people began to reason, 181.
SECT, a rallying point for error, 181; no sect in geometry; no diversity of view upon noonday sunshine, 181; prolonged disputes signify that both parties are in error, 185.
SELF LOVE, the instrument of our preservation, 187.
SENSATION. A divine power as manifest in the sensation of an insect as in the brain of Newton, 188. Our ignorance of sensation and mind, 189.
SENTENCES, Remarkable. Judicial murders, 190; the execution of Charles I. by English fanatics, and of women accused of witchcraft, 191; curious reflections on the mania which caused the killing of Mary Stuart, Servetus and other unfortunates, 197.

Serpents. Had Eve spat upon the reptile mankind need not have been "lost," 199; a simple snake exterminator, 200.

Servetus and other unfortunates, 197.

Shekel, the Jews never coined money, but gave this name to the coins they acquired from Gentiles, 201.

Sybils, their predictions were collected after the event, 204; the principal dogmas of Christianity were taken from a poem of the Cumœan sybil, 207.

Singing, observations on chanting, recitative, and the obsolete mode of dramatic declamation, 210.

Slaves. Slavery as ancient as war, and war as human nature, 213. The nations most ardent for liberty were the severest with their slaves, 213; Christianity countenanced slavery, 214, 217; the "dead hand" laws a relic of serfdom, 220; Monks as weasles that suck the blood of chickens, 222.

Sleepers, The Seven. The veracious story of the drowsy knights of Christendom who slept for one hundred and seventy-seven years, 222.

"Slow Bellies," the Cretans so described by St. Paul, 225. The effects of a costive habit on the amiability even of Saints, 226. St. Paul a cantankerous person, 227.

Society (Royal) of London, and Academies. Great men have been independent of learned societies, 228. An English Academy proposed by Swift, Bolingbroke, Pope and others, 229.

Socrates, "the atheist who says there is only one God," 234; his perfect logic, 235; fatal consequence of offending makers of and dealers in sacred articles, 236.

Solomon, and other royal bookmakers, 236; his inheritance of nearly six thousand million dollars in hard cash, not counting jewels and real estate, 239; yet he hungered for all the gold of Ophir, 240; fifty oxen and one hundred sheep killed daily for his household consumption; four hundred and twelve thousand horses in his stable, 241. Modern kings, unlike Solomon, have more mistresses than wives, 241. Bad taste of many of his Proverbs; doubts of authorship, 243;

Ecclesiastes and Song of Solomon awkward for Christianity that these books slipped into the sacred canon, 244.

Somnambulists and Dreamers. Unconscious action of the sleeping brain, 250; the philosophy of dreams, 256.

Sophists, the grand defect of Platonism is the transformation of abstract ideas into realities, 260.

Soul, literally—that which animates, 261. "We have not the smallest step on which to set our foot to reach the slightest knowledge of what makes us live and what makes us think," 262; why and how is mind not matter? 263; Revelation doubtless much better than philosophy, 265; ancient ideas of soul; Psyche, the soul of the senses; Pneuma, the breath; nous, the intelligence, 266. Locke's reverent materialism, 270; views of Gassendi, Descartes, Malebranche, and the Early Fathers, 267, 271, 288; the souls of beasts, what is instinct? 273. "While adoring God with all our soul let us ever confess our profound ignorance concerning that soul, that faculty of feeling and thinking which we owe to his infinite goodness, 277; what of the souls of idiots and monstrosities? 285; summary of Locke's hypothesis and reasoning, 290; the twelve good philosophers on an uninhabited island, 298; the deities of the Stoics, Epicureans, Greeks, Romans, and Hebrews, 305; the few who think do not set themselves to disturb the world, 307. The doctrine of immortality was ancient among the Egyptians, 308. Our inability to understand the soul, 312. The Old Testament says nothing about the spirituality and immortality of the soul, 315.

Space. We make God a spirit in our own mode, in our ignorance of his nature and universe, 320.

Stage, Police of the; actors subjected to excommunication, 322; yet comedies were played in nunneries to audiences of ecclesiastics, 325.

States, Governments. Everybody knows a better system than everyone else's, 327. Richelieu's idea, 328; grand failures in theory and practice, 329; France, England, India, Asia Minor. The Brahmin's ideal country—still to be discovered, 332.

States-General, a survey of the nations, their systems briefly noted, 333.

Vol. XIV.

Style, simplicity the best, 5; every piece of writing requires accuracy of idea, propriety of expression, and purity of language, 6; classical examples, 7; vulgarity of slangy phrases in serious writing; monotony is feebleness, 10; a flowery style, showy without strength or stability; may be used sparingly to lighten serious discourse; must not be confounded with the easy style, 11; coldness of style arises from a sterility of ideas or poverty of diction, 13; corrupt style of slip-shod expression, 14; professional jokers usually have minds as incorrect as they are superficial, 16.

Superstition, the St. Januarius annual "miracle," 17; bits of the Cross, the Virgin's hair, milk, and gown; Maundy Thursday observances, 18; apparition of Jesus in a French church; He leaves a weighty letter, 20; the pious Polish King-killers, 25; invoking the Holy Virgin to sanction crime, 28; the only worthy divinities of the harvest are the spade and hoe, 29; vagabond saints, ignorant and dirty, 30; the worst crimes occur in superstitious times, 30; the church always condemned magic yet always practiced it, 30; has no definition of superstition, 31; each great church and small sect calls the others superstitious, more or less, 31; how the church picked the people's pockets, 32; how far does policy permit superstition to be undermined, 33; the fewer superstitions the less fanaticism and calamities.

Symbol, or Credo. The words and signs by which the Greeks were initiated into the sacred mysteries; doubtful if the Apostles had this form, 34; the Creed not heard of until four centuries after Christ, 35; we must be good men whether anybody rose from the dead or not, 36; St. Pierre's Creed, 36.

SYSTEM. Chaldæan theory of the universe, 38; "in proportion as I grow older, I doubt of all things," 38. Absurd claims put forward to make believe that the ancients anticipated discoveries only possible under modern conditions, 40.

TERELAS, or Pterlaus, the man whose immortality was in a lock of his hair, which he feared to comb; how it was cut off, and what happened, 72; the Samson myth, 73.

TESTES, ecclesiastical rulings on, 74; Mosaical discrimination in selecting priests; virility an essential, 77.

THEISM, a religion diffused through all religions, 79; true that a little philosophy makes a man an atheist and much philosophy leads to the knowledge of a God, 79; theism is good sense not yet instructed by revelation, and other religions are good sense perverted by superstition, 80; it never persecutes, 81.

THEIST, is firmly persuaded of the existence of a Supreme Being, equally good and powerful, but does not presume to know how He acts, 82; to do good is his worship; to submit to God is his doctrine, 83.

THEOCRACY, in Japan, Egypt, Persia, Phœnicia, and over the Jews, 83; the Jewish republic anarchical, 86; the Papacy truly theocratical, 88.

THEODOSIUS, 346-395, the pious persecuting emperor, 88; his sentence of death by torture of those who petitioned for lighter taxation, 89; the truth about this royal "Saint," 90; the world revolves under necessity, insurmountable fatalism, 92.

THEOLOGIAN, he knows all about the unknowable, 92; which, with wealth or the art of push, lands him in the seat of a Cardinal or Pope, 93; a certain true theologian had learned so much that he ended life mistrusting all he had learned, 94.

THUNDER, merely a great electrical phenomenon, 96; Franklin forces it to descend tranquilly on the earth, 96; difficult for French poets to thunder in rhyme, 96; Richmann killed by his own thunderbolt, 99.

TOLERATION, the first law of nature; we do not cut each other's throats as merchants when we meet in the market; why then over religion? 100; Christians sought to dominate the state, hence their persecution, 101; they were at enmity among themselves on every point of their own doctrine, and persecuted each other, 101; the ancient Jews more tolerant than the Christians, 102; Christian fanaticism brought St. Bartholomew's day, "and this corner of the world has been worse than all that the ancients and moderns have ever said of hell," 103; if you have two religions, they will massacre each other; if you have thirty they will live in peace, 103; Jesus wrote not a line, 104; why do men who in private are tolerant, show the bitterest intolerance in public? 106; the interest of those who are in power is to keep down those under them, 106; Quakers most resemble the first Christians in doctrine and practice, 107; wherein Christians differ in practice from Jesus, 108; liberty of conscience established in America, 110; the religion of the Turks is most respectworthy and very austere, 111.

TOPHET. Jeremiah denounced the custom of casting Jewish children into the flames inside the idol Moloch, but was stoned to death, 114; the valley of Tophet outside Jerusalem, where the two crucified thieves were cast with the city's refuse, 114.

TORTURE, origin of the Inquisition, 115; extortion of testimony by torture, 116; the Jews never practiced it, 116; the terrible tortures inflicted on the Chevalier de Barre for singing impious songs, 118.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION, the Protestant objections to this doctrine, 119; makers of wafer gods, 120.

TRINITY, origin of the three-fold conception, 120; Plato's three divine essences, 121; early Christianity saturated with mysticism and meaningless definitions of the logos, 122; difficulties about the "three witnesses" in the first epistle of St. John, 125; various expert attempts to explain the trinity, 126; John Calvin's method of burning his explanation into poor Servetus, 129.

TRUTH. Pity that Pilate did not wait to learn what Truth is, 130; by rigorous study of mathematics and logic he might have become a truly learned and perfectly honest man, 132; historical truths less reliable the closer they are examined, 132; uncertainty of verbal testimony, 133.

TYRANNY. A single tyrant less objectionable than the tyranny of many, 134.

TYRANT. Cromwell an example, a usurper and a violent, unjust ruler, 135; Charles I. not a tyrant, but very unfortunate; Henry VIII., Elizabeth, Richard III., Pope Alexander VI., Constantine, were more or less tyrants; some were punished, the others escaped; Emperor Theodosius, venerated by the church, murdered fifteen thousand Roman citizens in the circus, with their families; the most abominable of hypocritical tyrants, 136.

—Preface to Lisbon Earthquake, xxxvi. 7.

—— "Prejudice will never allow two species of excellence to one man." —Preface to Catiline, xix. 259.

VOLTAIRE, HIS REVERENCE FOR THE DIVINE.

"I say there is but one God, in his nature infinite, nor can any being partake of this infinity * * * all nature speaks one God and one father."
—Socrates, xvi. 304.

—— "It is an insult on the divinity to conceive that he could possibly, in any manner whatsoever, commit with woman the crime we call adultery."
—Socrates, xvi. 305.

—— "Be careful above all not to turn religion into metaphysics; its essence is morality; dispute not, but worship." —Socrates, xvi. 304.

See x. 109.

VOX POPULI.

"With fears dejected, or inflamed with hope,
Still in extremes, the giddy multitude Tumultous rove and only interest binds them."
—Mérope, xv. 41.

A PHILOSOPHICAL DICTIONARY

Vol. XIV.—Continued.

VAMPIRES—VOYAGE.

Vampires, corpses who went out of their graves at night to suck the blood of the living, causing consumption, 143; these flourished in middle Europe; the only vampires in Paris and London have been stock-brokers and traders who suck the blood of the people in broad daylight, 144; judicial trials and execution of veritable vampires in the eighteenth century, 146; the superstitious belief in miraculous restorations to life, 147.

Veletri, the birthplace of Emperor Augustus, who was ordained a god while living, 149; reigned forty years and there were twelve conspiracies against him, 151.

Venality, the superstition that official corruption is useful and cannot be stopped, 152; a strong will and a strong arm can stop it at any time; if Peter the Great had not willed strongly, Russia would still be barbarous, 153.

Venice, its self-acquired liberty, 153; which she preserved for eleven centuries, 155; the charter of independence that is worth anything must be won by the sword and maintained by force, 155.

Verse. It is difficult to be a poet but very easy to decry them in prose, 156; there never existed an eloquent man who did not love poetry, 156.

Viands. Importance of in religions; early Christians ate forbidden pagan meats, 157; St. Peter's heaven-sent feast, with permission to gorge, 158; Brahmins object to eat their relations, whose souls may have occupied the butcher-meats, 158.

Virtue. Brutus rashly wrong when he called it a phantom, 160; the four cardinal virtues, fortitude, prudence, temperance, justice; the three theological virtues, faith, hope, and charity, 161; the former are incomplete without beneficence, which, combined with justice, comprises all the virtues; the rest are but useful qualities, 163; monsters such as Nero and Pope Alexander VI. did occasional good acts, being virtuous at the time, 165.

Visions, beatific, 165; their utility in gaining money for the church, 166; the ghost of Madame St. Memin came back to announce that she was in hell because her husband had been mean in the payment of church burial fees, 167; later she reappeared, stating she was then in purgatory, but the monks to whom she appeared were sentenced to death for attempted extortion, xiv. 167.

Vision of Constantine. No pagan writer knows anything of the sign of the cross in the sky, 170; three early Christian writers, Pophyrius, Lactantius, and Eusebius, the historian, are silent on this prodigy, 171; though the latter, years afterwards, mentions Constantine's story, 172; various versions of the tradition and the language of the inscription, 175; Constantine was not always victorious after the vision, 176; Eusebius, in his life of the emperor, does not support the story by the evidence of a single officer or private in the army, though everyone saw the miraculous sign, 177.

Vows. To make a vow for life is to make oneself a slave, 180; unwisdom of pledging oneself at fifteen that nothing shall alter our then convictions or purpose, 180; tragical story of a young couple, forced to enter monastery and convent, with the incredible tortures inflicted on the young lover after he had escaped, only to learn of the girl's death from grief, as related by him to Voltaire, 181.

Voyage of St. Peter to Rome. Of little importance whether he went there or not, so long as Popes hold possession, 184; St. James, the brother of Jesus, founded the church of Jerusalem and was called the first of all the bishops, 185; the first church raised at Rome was that of St. John, which disposes of the episcopal claims of St. Peter, 185; various reasons for discrediting the tradition that he was ever in Rome, 186; but modern Popes find his episcopal throne a much more comfortable seat than he and his successors ever enjoyed, 190.

WALLER—WOMEN.

WALLER, EDMUND, 1605-1687, his poems liked in France, 191; the cultivation of literature by English nobility, 192.

War, its universality an argument for the Manichœan doctrine of good and evil powers at eternal strife, 193; absurdity of war, 194; and of invoking the favor of the God of Mercy before, and thanking Him after, we have slaughtered thousands who have not harmed us, 196; the pulpit seldom denounces popular wars, 197; a battlefield death, 198; Montesquieu's apology for war, 199.

Weakness on both sides, the motto of all quarrels, 200; curious disputations in the middle ages, the amiable controversy of the Stercorists, the rival rituals, and the kitchen garden quarrel of the Cordeliers, 203; disappearance of sects and sectarian controversies, 205; Parliamentary experience of the unhappy M. de Langeais, 206; our inborn love of faction and fighting, 207.

Whys, The. Questions very hard to answer, on war, government, corruption, officialism, public worship, the sale of the "Course of Atheism," and other forbidden works, 207; why do we ignore the laboring men, but pay court to the useless man who is rich only by their misery? Why spread the ridiculous error that the grain rots to germinate? Why more insects than men? Why do we dream if we have no soul? Why are dreams so silly if we have a soul? Why do we exist? 207.

Wicked, to say we are born so, 215; children are not wicked, neither are [were] Philadelphians, 217; a census of bad people, 217; of truly wicked people there only remains a few politicians, secular and clerical, 218.

Will, sensible answer of Pope Honorius when asked if Jesus had two wills as well as two natures, 219; atrocities and wars that resulted from the dispute over this fantastic question, 221.

Wit, Spirit, Intellect. The public weary of wit, 221; it may be a subtle allusion, a pun, a fancy, a hidden meaning, matching things that differ, severing things that match, and sometimes it is the expressing only half of your thought, leaving the other half to be guessed, 222; out of place in danger and passion, when plain expressions are the fittest, 223; he who cannot shine by thought tries to attract notice by a new fangled word, 229; a man of spirit, what it means, 232; novel expression necessary to spirited speech, 232; an author wishes to show himself, when he should only show his personages, 235; Goldsmith's delicate touch, 235; wit and pretty fancies, out of place, are blemishes, 236; false wit, false style, 237; various biblical terms to describe soul; all words describing the understanding are metaphors, 240; French wit, esprit, 242; poetical metaphors, ridiculed by Molière, 250; how early teachings often distort the intellect, 253; the philosophy of truth-speaking and absurdity of pushing it to extremes, 254.

Women, curious theories of the ancients, 255; their physical characteristics, unfitted for the work of men, 257; Montesquieu's blunder respecting the Greek word for women's love, 258; many learned women, but seldom or never are they distinguished for invention, 259; they can reign in monarchies, but have never been allowed to take part in the government of republics, 259; great Queens, Isabella of Spain, Elizabeth of England, Maria Theresa of Hungary, 260; errors respecting Mahometan subjection of women, 261; polygamy in various lands and periods, 262; stories of polyandry, 265; retort of the Mussulman to his Christian censor, 267; detailed analysis of the story.
